Stage Fifteen • Business & Organizational Acumen

WHY THIS MATTERS

A genuine close-out does three things every time: names what was actually accomplished, connects it forward to what's next, and gives a specific, concrete action to take before the next session. Given how analytically dense this stage is, the close-out also plays a real role in helping participants feel a genuine sense of accomplishment rather than just exhaustion after a demanding session.

Close-Out Scripts

SESSION 1

Closing Session 1

"Today was about genuinely understanding how an organization works: its business model, structure, departments, revenue, costs, budget, P&L, and the metrics it actually tracks."

"Notice how much of this was things you could have learned simply by asking — the value today wasn't secret information, it was deliberately taking the time to ask and confirm rather than assume."

"Before next time: identify one real business problem, initiative, or decision at your organization you could analyze in depth."

SESSION 2

Closing Session 2

"Today was genuinely demanding: mapping stakeholders and processes, analyzing a real problem, building a full business case, quantifying costs and benefits, making a clear recommendation, and researching the market, competitors, and industry."

"If FIRST S14 felt like the hardest thing we've done in this stage, that's because it genuinely is — building a real business case is one of the most valuable, transferable skills in this entire program."

"Before next time: think of one process inefficiency you've noticed at your organization."

SESSION 3

Closing Session 3 (Stage Close)

"That's Stage Fifteen, complete. We moved from understanding how organizations work, to genuinely analyzing them, to strategic and reflective thinking — connecting daily work to goals, seeing through an executive's eyes, and understanding real decisions and change."

"FIRST S25 asked you to name your strongest area and your most significant remaining gap. That kind of honest inventory is worth returning to periodically as your business acumen keeps developing, not just once here."

"Before we close: share, out loud or in the shared doc, your one genuine strength and your one genuine gap from this stage."

"Stage Sixteen picks up with Workplace Professionalism & Ethics — a different lens, but one that depends on the organizational understanding you've just spent three sessions building."
