Stage Ten • Relationships & Connections

WHY THIS MATTERS

A genuine close-out does three things every time: names what was actually accomplished, connects it forward to what's next, and gives a specific, concrete action to take before the next session. Given this stage's personal content, the close-out also plays a real role in helping participants transition out of a reflective, sometimes emotionally open headspace before returning to the rest of their day.

Close-Out Scripts

SESSION 1

Closing Session 1

"Today was about the friendships you've chosen: forming them deliberately, supporting each other reciprocally, protecting time for real connection, addressing conflict honestly, and celebrating milestones together."

"The common thread today was intention. Good friendships don't just happen — they're built through specific, deliberate choices, the same ones we practiced today."

"Before next time: think of a current or upcoming group project, ideally with a real partner or team already in place."

SESSION 2

Closing Session 2

"Today moved from relationships you choose to ones you're placed into: identifying the right partner, dividing work fairly, aligning on goals, solving problems together, exchanging feedback, building accountability, and leading rather than just contributing."

"Notice that most team friction traces back to something left unaddressed or unspoken — today was about naming and addressing those things before they become genuine problems."

"Before next time: think of one person, even a tentative guess, who could serve as a genuine mentor."

SESSION 3

Closing Session 3 (Stage Close)

"That's Stage Ten, complete. We've covered friendships, teamwork, and now mentorship and professional connections — three genuinely different kinds of relationships, each built through the same underlying practice: deliberate, honest investment."

"FIRST N30 asked you to look back across all three. That kind of honest, comprehensive reflection is worth returning to periodically, not just once here."

"Before we close: name one specific relationship — a friendship, a team relationship, or a mentor connection — you're committing to invest in further after this program."

"Stage Eleven picks up with Tools & Technology — a different kind of foundation, but one that still depends on the relationships you've just spent three sessions building."
