WHY THIS MATTERS

How a session ends shapes what participants actually retain and do next, often more than how it began. A session that just stops when time runs out leaves people without a clear sense of what mattered or what's coming. A genuine close-out does three things every time: names what was actually accomplished, connects it forward to what's next, and (where relevant) gives a specific, concrete action to take before the next session.

Each close-out below is written to be read close to verbatim, in the last five to ten minutes of the session.

Close-Out Scripts

SESSION 1

Closing Session 1

"Let's take stock of what we actually did today. You named three non-negotiable values. You wrote a letter from your future self. You got clear on your purpose, drafted how you'd describe yourself to a stranger, and took an honest look at both your strengths and your real growth areas."

"If you take away just one thing from today, let it be this: everything after this point in the program — industry research, role fit, even how you negotiate an offer — should trace back to what you named today. If a future opportunity doesn't fit the values or vision you just wrote down, that's real information, not just a feeling to ignore."

"Before Session 2: think about one target industry or role, even a rough guess, and make sure you'll have internet access — we're doing real research next time."

SESSION 2

Closing Session 2

"Today we pointed everything from last session outward. You mapped a passion to real career links, built an industry brief, traced how a career path actually unfolds, researched a specific role in depth, benchmarked real salary data, and pulled it all together into an honest SWOT."

"Notice that today's work only really worked because of what you did last session — your strengths, your weaknesses, your values. Self-awareness and market research aren't separate tracks; they're the same project."

"Before Session 3: complete a free personality assessment (I'll drop the link in chat/on the handout) and bring your result. Final session is about how you work, not just what you want."

SESSION 3

Closing Session 3 (Stage Close)

"That's Stage One, complete. In three sessions, you've gone from values and vision, through market research, to a genuine understanding of how you personally work best — your personality, your work style, your decision-making, your learning style, and a real productivity system to hold it all together."

"Two things are still in motion: your Work Style tracking log and your Learning Style method test, both running over the next several days. I'll check in with you about both in about a week — don't let those trail off."

"Before we close: I want each of you to say, out loud or in the shared doc, one specific system or habit you're committing to starting this week. Not a vague intention — something concrete enough that I could check in on it with you."

"Stage Two picks up with Professional Identity & Personal Brand — we'll take everything you named about yourself here and start building how you present it to the world."
