FOR FACILITATORS

Send the relevant section below to participants 2-3 days before each session — short enough to actually get read, specific enough that people arrive ready rather than cold. The three sections below are also formatted for you to copy directly into an email or shared message.

Before Session 1: Foundations of Self

WHAT TO DO BEFORE THIS SESSION

- Bring one recent decision to mind — accepting or declining something, choosing between two options, a genuine trade-off you made. You don't need to write anything down, just have it ready to reference.
- No research or reading required. Just show up ready to think honestly about yourself, not the version of yourself you'd put on a resume.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Session 1 is entirely internal reflection. The only preparation that actually helps is arriving without a packed schedule right before or after — give yourself a few minutes of quiet beforehand if you can.

Before Session 2: Aligning with the Market

WHAT TO DO BEFORE THIS SESSION

- Identify one target industry or role, even a tentative guess. “I'm not sure, but maybe marketing” is a completely fine answer.
- Bring a laptop or phone with internet access — this session involves real research on industries, roles, and salary.
- Optional: if you already have 1-2 job postings that interest you, save the links to reference during Role Research.

WHY THIS MATTERS

This session is research-heavy. Arriving with even a rough target, and working internet access, means you spend the session researching instead of figuring out what to research.

Before Session 3: Working Style & Systems

WHAT TO DO BEFORE THIS SESSION

- Complete a free personality assessment before the session (16Personalities.com takes about 12 minutes) and have your result ready.
- This session includes two exercises that continue for several days afterward (Work Style and Learning Style) — no prep needed for these now, just know that's coming.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Completing the personality assessment beforehand means the session can focus on genuine reflection rather than spending fifteen minutes of group time taking the test itself.
