Stage Thirteen • Teamwork & Collaboration

WHY THIS MATTERS

A genuine close-out does three things every time: names what was actually accomplished, connects it forward to what's next, and gives a specific, concrete action to take before the next session. Given this stage's emphasis on real team application, the close-out is also a natural moment to reinforce that the practices covered are meant to continue with a participant's actual team beyond the workshop itself.

Close-Out Scripts

SESSION 1

Closing Session 1

"Today was about setting a team up to genuinely succeed: real alignment, clear roles, explicit norms, a plan built together, structured brainstorming, shared decisions, fair delegation, and a real accountability rhythm."

"Notice how much of today was about making things explicit that teams usually leave assumed. That single shift, explicit over assumed, is probably the highest-leverage idea in this entire session."

"Before next time: bring a real, current problem your team is facing, if one exists."

SESSION 2

Closing Session 2

"Today was about the real, ongoing work of collaborating: solving problems together, keeping documentation and tools genuinely shared, working across real differences in function, culture, and location, and handling handoffs and feedback well."

"A recurring theme today was that partial effort, partial adoption, partial documentation, partial feedback, tends to recreate the exact problem it was meant to solve. Full, genuine commitment is what actually works."

"Before next time: know that our final session covers harder territory — conflict, difficult teammates, honest retrospectives. Come ready for more honesty than today asked for."

SESSION 3

Closing Session 3 (Stage Close)

"That's Stage Thirteen, complete. We've covered forming and structuring a team well, doing the real day-to-day work of collaboration, and now navigating genuine difficulty — conflict, difficult teammates, consensus, compromise, recognition, celebration, and honest retrospection."

"FIRST Q30 asked you to deliberately combine practices from across this entire stage, not just recall them individually. High-performing teams are built exactly that way — through combination, not isolated technique."

"Before we close: name one specific team practice from across this whole stage you're genuinely committing to keep using."

"Stage Fourteen picks up with Project Management — a more formal structure that builds directly on the collaborative foundation you've just spent three sessions building."
